If you are being cared for by someone else other than your parent you may be being privately fostered.

What is private fostering?

If you are under the age of 16 (18 if you're disabled) and your parent(s) have asked someone who is not your relative to look after you for 28 days or more, you may be privately fostered.

The person who looks after you is called a private foster carer. In this situation a relative is a grandparent, brother, sister, uncle or aunt. They can also be related to you by marriage so this includes step parents. Someone living with your mother or father, or a great aunt, great uncle or cousin doesn't qualify as a relative in this case.

What should happen?

Your parents or private foster carer should tell Cumberland Children's Services who is looking after you and where you will be living.

Once we know that you are privately fostered a social worker will come to see you. The social worker will make sure that you are happy living with your private foster carers and will want to talk to you to make sure that you are okay. They will also want to see that where you are living is suitable and you are getting the support you need.

Why are children privately fostered?

Children will usually live with private foster carers because their parents or the person who they usually live with cannot look after them for a while. Often, children in private foster care are able to live with a relative or a friend who they already know. A private fostering arrangement might happen for a number of reasons.

What else will the social worker do?

The social worker will visit you at least every six weeks, in the first year that you live with private foster carers. After the first year, the social worker will visit every 3 months, but you can ask to see the social worker if you have something you want to talk to them about.

The social worker will talk to private foster carers to see if they need any help or support. They will also get in touch with your parent(s) to make sure they know you are being well looked after in the private foster home.

Is there anything a private foster carer must not do?

You are still the child of your own parents.

Your private foster carer must not:

- Change your name.
- Change your school.
- Move you to another family.
- Take you to another part of this country.
- Take you overseas to another country without telling your parents and asking their permission.

If you need serious medical treatment, your own parents have to agree to this – unless it is an emergency and your parents cannot be contacted quickly enough. Then a doctor will decide what to do.

What if there's a problem?

If you are worried, unhappy or have been hurt tell an adult that you can trust, your parents, your teacher or your social worker. There is a space on the back of this leaflet for your social worker's name and telephone number.
